

Tamir Ben-Hur is Professor of Neurology, and Director of the Division for Clinical Neurosciences at Hadassah – Hebrew University Medical Centre. His research interests are in neuroimmunology and regenerative medicine in the nervous system. He focuses on the therapeutic properties of neural stem cells, and their bilateral interactions with the nervous system in normal and pathologic states. Among these, he is developing the utilization of human embryonic stem cells for therapy in multiple sclerosis.