

Professor Neeta Singh graduated (MBBS & MD Obstetrics & Gynaecology) from prestigious King Georges Medical College, Lucknow, India. She pursued her higher training in infertility under Professor Sadhna Desai at Mumbai and later at George Washington University, USA. She received her fellowship in IVF and embryology at Leuback University, Germany. She always wanted to help childless couples and in pursuit of realizing her dream she was instrumental in starting India's first public sector IVF facility at AIIMS, New Delhi which is one of the best tertiary care facilities in India providing free ART services to needy couples.

She was awarded the AIIMS Excellence in Research award for year 2016.

She is known for her pioneering research on use of stem cells in treating Asherman's syndrome

- She is bestowed with the visiting Professorship at centre for Human Reproduction NY, USA.
- She has received many prestigious awards like FOGSI Young Scientist award, FOGSI imaging Science award .she is an ICRETT fellow and WHO Fellow in reproductive health Geneva.
- She has published more than 130 indexed national international papers and delivered more than 100 guest lecturers in national & international scientific meetings and contributed more than 20 chapters in different books on Reproductive Endocrinology